USE OF WOOD IN INTERIOR DESIGNING

Wood is used in interiors as a surface material for walls, ceilings and floors, furniture, stairs, windows and doors, in features and decorations, etc. In addition to whitewood, redwood and birch, other types of wood are also used in interiors. The most common are oak, alder, aspen, maple and ash.

Wood is a widely used material in various features and installations in interior décor. There are a large number of wood species that come in a range of textures, colors and grain patterns. This variety gives interior designers like us at Marshall Erg Design the flexibility to create stunning design concepts for a range of interior structures and elements.

With years of experience behind us, we have what it takes to use the right types of wood, in the right measure to create superb balance and unique design concepts in different types of interior spaces. Creating flawless interiors is never a matter of chance. It takes a deep understanding of the different types of timber, how they behave, what types of finishes work well for them etc.

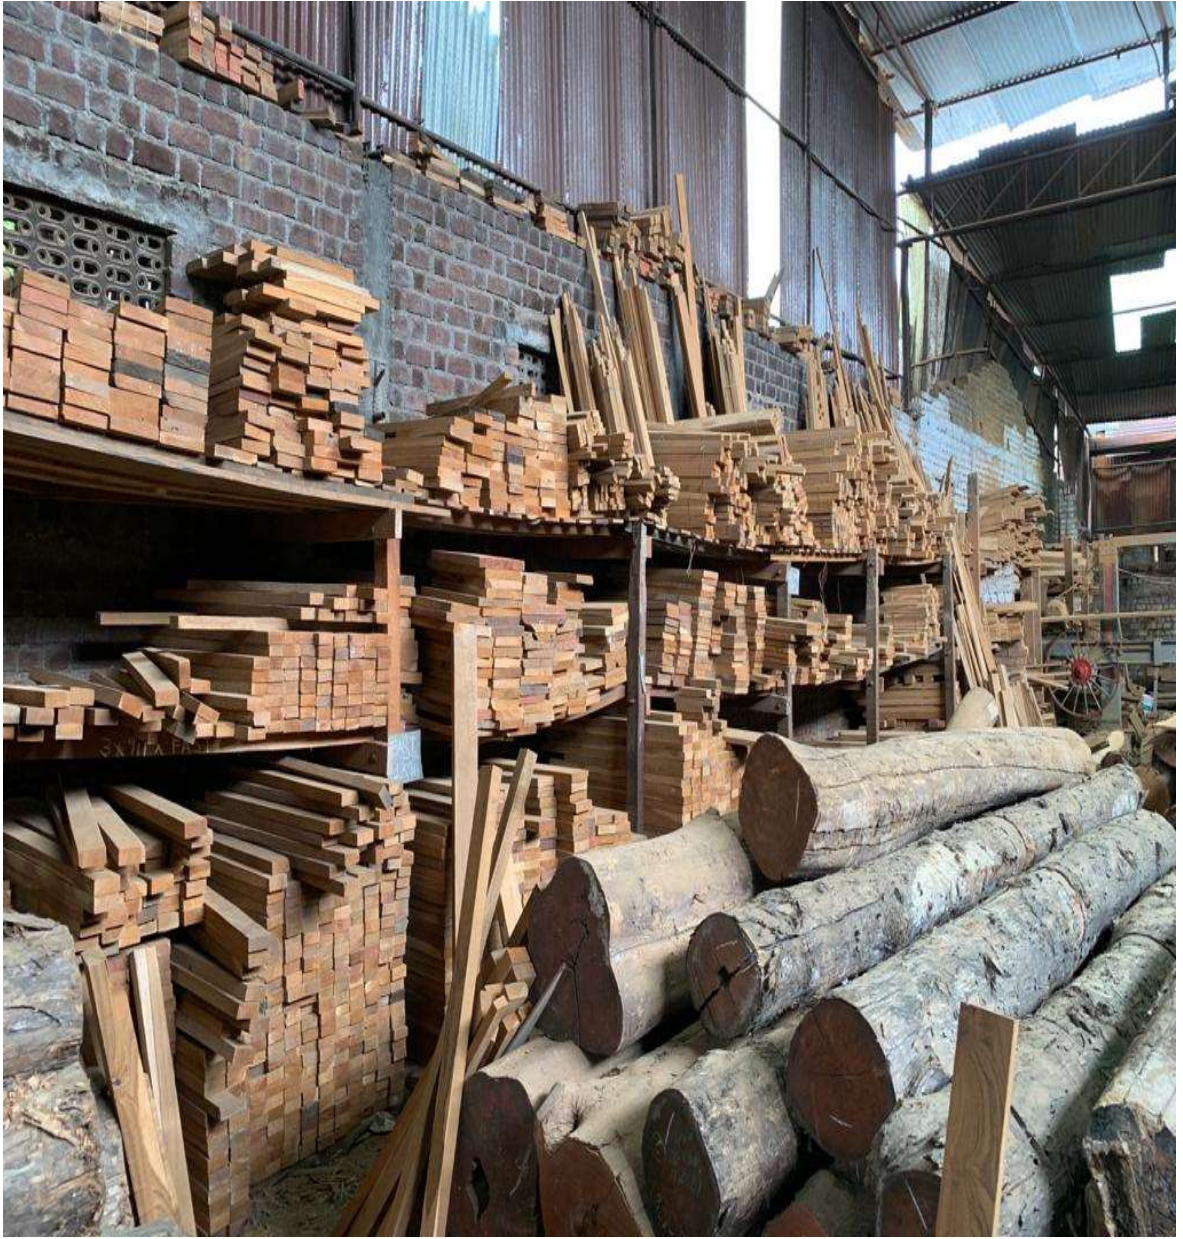

In this context the visit to timber market was done so that the students get to know the various types of wood and its usage .the visit was very fruitful and the students got the knowledge of the timber.
